Question # 17

Tell me what kinds of skills should a member of an airline cabin crew be expected to have?

Answer:-

An airline attendant should be intelligent and quick, with critical thinking skills and the ability to analyze situations and remain calm during stressful scenarios. They should be able to multitask, and manage the needs of various parties at once. Above all, they should be friendly, welcoming, hospitable, helpful, and easy-to-approach individuals, who exhibit an air of confidence, knowledge, and eagerness to assist. Passengers want to know that the people onboard the plane with them know what's what, and can address their needs or concerns with efficiency and friendliness.

Airline attendants should also be able to work well in teams, as they must cooperate with others in the cabin crew to keep the passengers on the plane feeling safe and satisfied. As such, stewards and stewardesses must demonstrate fantastic verbal communication skills; not only to aid in their cooperative endeavors, but also in case they need to deal with rowdy or otherwise difficult passengers. In cases like this, it's important to remain calm and cheerful, but still firm and poised to assure the other passengers that things are under control.

Question # 18

Tell me a time when a co-worker was not doing their job. Did you step in, and if so, how?

Answer:-

This question is not an opportunity for you to vent your frustrations about past co-workers. Questions like this are extremely important in interviews, because they let your interviewer delve deeper into your personality, beyond mere traits and into your own, applicable experiences, which speak loads more than what you think you know about yourself.

For this particular question, focus not on the ways your co-worker was being lazy, but the ways in which you intervened and what the outcome of your actions were - hopefully positive, otherwise you should opt for another story.

For example: One day, I noticed my co-worker John was avoiding a task that he had specifically been assigned that morning by our boss. Our boss said she wanted it done by 3 o'clock, and that time was fast approaching. Worried about what the consequences of missing this assignment would be, I asked John why he had not started on it yet, and if there was anything I could do to help. It turns out, nobody had explained to him how to get started on this assignment, and which piece of software to use for it, and he was too embarrassed to ask. I was able to help him out, boost his confidence in the process, and make a new friend at work!

Answer:-

For this be prepared and research salary to find out what similar positions are paying in your area before you go to the interview. Try to find this information out before giving your salary expectations. You can and should provide a range instead of an exact number. But again, don't say any numbers you're not comfortable with because if the employer offers you a salary at the lowest end of your range, you don't have much to negotiate with when it comes to getting a higher salary.

Question # 59

Explain if you were an animal, which one would you want to be?

Answer:-

Interviewers use this type of psychological question to see if you can think quickly. If you answer 'a bunny', you will make a soft, passive impression. If you answer 'a lion', you will be seen as aggressive. What type of personality will it take to get the job done? So answer this question smartly matching with your personality.

Question # 60

Explain me what are your hobbies?

Answer:-

This is mostly a trick question, testing again for your general people skills and enjoyment of team-based activities. While you shouldn't lie for this question - or any - you should consider placing a larger emphasis on the hobbies you enjoy in the company of others. Sports, for instance, will give you a chance to hint at your leadership and cooperative abilities. If you say something like cooking, and hosting dinner parties, it will let you show off your hospitality skills, and ability to manage many people at once. This activity also isn't presumably done alone.
