Question # 1

What do you think about when you are alone in your car?

Answer:-

I would say, 'On the way to work I'm thinking about the 20 things on my to-do list when I get into the office,'. "That demonstrates that you're on and ready to go when you get there.

Question # 2

It's how you think. Your social fit," Smith explained. "Are you fun?"

Answer:-

I'd say. That's a conversational dead end!

Seriously, do you really want an interviewer to conclude that, after knowing each other just five minutes, you have nothing else to say to one another? God forbid you run into one another in the kitchen while heating up a Lean Cuisine - those will be the longest five minutes of your life!

On the "don't" list, Lachapelle suggests, never speak negatively about a past employer or former co-worker.

And never, under any circumstances, miss an opportunity to sell yourself. Even if a penguin walks into the room!

Question # 3

If you had three minutes alone in a lift with the CEO, what would you say?

Answer:-

This is not the time for waffling, you're being asked to give a succinct summary which shows your skills and characteristics and interest in the company you' may be about to join.

Steer clear from the 'How did you get where you were' type questions and go for something which will make you stand out and memorable.

Question # 4

How many hours would it take to clean every single window in London?

Answer:-

To work this out you'll need a lot longer than the time given in an interview so therefore the answer you give is more to do with how you think about the process of solving the question - rather than coming up with the answer itself.

Add to this the fact buildings are popping up all the time in London, just take the stat last year that 260 new tower blocks were currently planned for the London skyline, and it's a near-on impossible task to come up with a factually correct reply.

Instead think about how many people there are in London - eight million - and how many businesses - 3 million listed on Companies House for the whole of the UK - and you can start to think about the answer.

However, when you start factoring in the size of the window and the ability of the window cleaner, you're on sticky ground.

Replying with an answer on how you would go about finding out an approximate number will work in your favour as it shows how you deal with pressure and problem solving.

Tell me why A Car Wash Manager's Job Is So Difficult
And What To Do About It?

Answer:-

The car wash industry has elements of retail, service, and manufacturing involved in turning out the end product of a clean vehicle. Dealing with customers is like a retail business, managing employees is more like a service operation, and keeping the place running smoothly with all of the equipment to take care of is very similar to running a manufacturing facility. After working for over 20 years in this industry and being involved in the recruiting, initial training, and ongoing development of managers at all levels, both new to the business and experienced, here are six (6) major challenges that make a car wash manager's job very difficult to accomplish. Lest you get a little depressed reading this, please know that I will give you some solutions for these issues at the end of this answer.

Answer:-

Pineapple, mango or kiwi? Again with this one there's not really a perfect answer. Instead of picking your favorite, try and go for a fruit you can use to describe your own personality and strengths.

The reasons you give are more to do with how you can use own experiences and skills to benefit the company rather than what fruit you would pick from the fruit bowl.

How do you get an elephant in a fridge?

Answer:-

How big is the fridge?

Approach this one by considering why you would ever need to get an elephant in a fridge. As the reasons are pretty bizarre (unless perhaps you're a zookeeper?) it's better to creatively consider it and answer something like

* 'Take the giraffe out first'.

This way you've considered the size and practical issues and instead of questioning the action you're finding a response to it.
