Question # 14

Explain me why are you currently unemployed?

Answer:-

Ok, we admit it's unlikely the interviewer will put the point so bluntly. Typically, this question is asked in the following way: "Tell me about why you left your [insert name of last job]."

What they really want to ask is: "Were you fired and if so, why?" People are reorganized and fired all the time for reasons that have nothing to do with their individual performance. On the other hand, some people are fired for cause as well.

Whichever category you fall into, be sure to spin the best story possible without being defensive. The more casual and confident you can be in your answer, the easier it will be for your interviewer to conclude what you want them to: "Ok, no big deal."

Question # 15

Please explain how Do You Feel About the Progress You Made in Your Last Position?

Answer:-

Don't discuss your feelings, per se, but do stress your accomplishments. For instance, "When I started with the Blake Company, I was given responsibility for their operations in Mexico and Costa Rica. After I turned them around, they made me general manager for Mexico and Central America. How are your international operations performing?" An answer like this communicates great information about your value as an employee while still conveying positive feelings about your progress.

Question # 19

Why our company?

Answer:-

This is one of the most common job interview questions. If you're interviewing for a role that might be relatively 'standard' across many other companies, it's actually a very good question - so it's a good idea to have a ready answer. It also is a test to see how much you understand about the larger context and employer, itself. Think about the interviewer's perspective and about the company goals. This is a time to show that you understand the company's mission, its values or something about its culture. Remember, you want to make the interviewer feel good about where he or she works and make them believe you really want to join them.

Question # 20

What Motivates You as Delivery Driver?

Answer:-

Resist the temptation to joke, "A steady paycheck!" Tie your motivation to the work being performed at this specific company. In addition, you could mention things like the opportunity to learn and grow, working with smart people who are passionate about their jobs, and contributing to the success of an organization.

Read More Answers.

Question # 21

Explain me what do you know about this organization?

Answer:-

This is a similar question to the previous one, but you still might get both in one interview. Essentially, the interviewer wants to know whether you care enough about this position and the business to take the time to do your homework.

So do your homework! While this isn't a test, you should be aware of the business's major initiatives, mission, and qualities. You should also look into all aspects of the business that are related to the position or function you'll be performing. For example, if you're interviewing for a marketing role, make sure to look at all of the company's social media accounts.

Question # 26

Explain me what did you do in the years that are missing from your resume?

Answer:-

If you're someone who has taken time out of the workforce, research from Vanderbilt University suggests that you be up-front about it. According to the study, female job applicants returning to the workforce after a long absence were more likely to get hired if they provided a reason for the employment gap on their resume, even if that reason was taking care of children.

Intuitively, honesty is the best policy and it can be awkward (or even illegal) for a prospective employer to ask you about your family situation. So being forthright about your situation will make everyone feel better.

Question # 27

Can you explain me are you efficient with your time?

Answer:-

I always try to be punctual in August, I am never late, always planing my time to be the best one.

Read More Answers.

Question # 28

Tell me why are you interested in the role?

Answer:-

As a job seeker, the best way to answer this common interview question is to emphasize the merits and exciting aspects of the position itself to convey your enthusiasm, rather than a time to rehash how your background and work experience is a fit.

Think of it this way: Even if you're the perfect fit, that's what the rest of the interview is to demonstrate. This is the time when you get to demonstrate your enthusiasm about the work you're about to do. Actually wanting to do a certain job counts for a lot.

Question # 29

Tell me what Did You Think of Your Last Manager?

Answer:-

Whatever your true feelings might be, stay positive. This is not the time or place to list your boss's shortcomings or frustrating behaviors. Try responses like: "She was the kind of person I could learn from." or "We were able to communicate well and things got done quickly."
