Event Planner Job Interview Preparation Guide.

Question # 1

What was the most successful event you've planned in the past?

Answer:-

I single-handedly coordinated the Coats for Kids drive for 2013. Without a committee and very few volunteers. I planned it, I marketed it, I married it. I feel it was so successful because I constantly thought about my clients (the kids). I wanted to make sure that my efforts and planning ensured that they got the best result.

Question # 2

What was the most challenging event you've planned in the past?

Answer:-

Planning HF for BHGH was a big challenge because an event like it had never been done by this organization and there was no budget. Therefore, we had to get absolutely everything donated, we had to manage volunteers, and we had to trust that the vendors who said they would donate their services and time held their commitment. Although a challenge, we involved over 17 different local businesses who donated their time, money and/or products.

Question # 9

What would you do if the DJ is 2 hour late and has not shown up or answers his phone?

Answer:-

First of all, I would never wait for 2 hours to pass before I started looking for a back up. If the DJ was 10 minutes late I would already be trying to get into contact with him and if I couldn't reach him I would already be working on a back up plan just in case it turns out that he doesn't show. You should always have a generic background music track available just in case. Even if your DJ shows up, there is no guarantee that he won't experien

Question # 10

Tell me about one bad experience you've had, preferably something catastrophic, how did you handle it? Was the event still a success?

Answer:-

Because vendors at HF donated their time and services, we could not guarantee their commitment. One vendor, the face painter, canceled 30 minutes before start time. In order to avoid false advertising, I purchased a face painting kit from a local craft store and found a volunteer to paint guests instead. It worked great.

Question # 11

What was your most difficult event promoting? What made it difficult?

Answer:-

The most difficult event promoting for me was a Carnival that was set for the town. What made it difficult was the lack of sponsorship money from local businesses, especially during these economic trying times. Therefore, our promoting was limited to basically free advertising.

Question # 12

Tell me about a work situation that required a creative solution?

Answer:-

I had reserved a suite for a guest checking into a hotel I worked out. I got to work on the day he was supposed to arrive and say the suite had been given away and I just got a sick filling because we had talked several times to make sure everything was set up because he wanted his family to be able to stay in the same room. So what I did instead was give him two connecting rooms, so that the kids could their own room and the adults having theirs.

Question # 15

What would you like to learn about our company and this job?

Answer:-

It always helps to prepare a list of questions that you want to ask your prospective employer. Not only does this give you useful insights, but it's a great opportunity to show your enthusiasm about the job and company. Even if this question doesn't come up in your interview, our experience shows that most employers are more than happy to answer a reasonable number of questions. In the worst case, you may be out of time and don't get to ask questions, but it never hurts to ask.

Question # 17

What does DDR stand for? What is typically included in a DDR?

Answer:-

DDR stands for day delegate rate," is, of course, the basic answer you would expect, while hearing your candidate go on to say things like "it is often the most cost effective way of booking hotels or venues for event planners as it is a per person cost" could mean bonus points.

Questions such as 'what is typically included in a DDR?' also give the candidate the chance to show their general understanding of professional event organisation, as there is no simple yes and no answer, but listing things such as room hire, water, buffet lunch, car parking, wi-fi connection and so on would show that they have dealt with such venues before, or could at least use their initiative to think about what a venue might be expected to include as part of its conference facilities.

Question # 18

Suppose If you had to describe yourself as detail-oriented or big-picture oriented, which would you choose? Why?

Answer:-

I would say a little of both. In order to get the big picture I need to focus on the details, but I try not to over examine things and keep in mind the main goal and big picture.

Question # 19

Give me five of your favorite venues in X, Y or Z and tell me why?

Answer:-

This is the sort of question which can really help you whittle down those early applicants. "I like the Apollo in Manchester because the sloped floor makes me feel drunker and it's close enough to my house to mean I don't have to pay for taxis," is the sort of answer which might suggest they are looking at events from the wrong perspective. Saying something more like, "Colston Hall in Bristol really has the wow factor for visitors since its 20m refurbishment, while the spaces are bright and airy, parking and accessibility are great and the staff make sure everything is streamlined and runs smoothly for event planners," however, might suggest you have somebody more suitable on your hands.

Question # 20

What brings out the most excitement for you in event planning?

Answer:-

In the planning of the event itself, I'd say that I'm pretty excited throughout the whole process, but more when I am talking and coordinating with all of the vendors who will be making it happen, I envision it in my head and hope that it comes out as glamorous as I think it will be.

Question # 21

What is ISO20121? What does it do, how does it work?

Answer:-

The formal adoption of 2007's British Standard for sustainable event management on a worldwide scale as the International Standard ISO20121 last year was one of the biggest news stories for the events industry in 2012, so you would expect anyone already involved in events planning to have picked up on it. Even if you're interviewing for starter roles, somebody who has done some basic research in advance of a job application or an aspiring events professional who has kept abreast of developments in their preferred career of choice, really should have picked up on this key change, which kicked in just in time for last year's biggest event, the 2012 Games.

Question # 22

Tell me about your Event Planning experience and how you work with the planning committee of an event?

Answer:-

My experience in event planning happened over time through a destination restaurant. We were looking for different ideas to improve our bottom line. We offered a panoramic view of the intracoastal and we decided to start working hotels and sending out e-mail blasts to start booking rehearsal dinners, weddings and any everything in between. I discovered I had a flair for decorating, networking with the community to really wanting to do this full time. I have worked with the local chamber and woman's club in various positions on committees and they keep asking me to come back because I get results in what I am assigned to do and that I am a great team player that is reliable.

Question # 32

What Are Your Goals And Achievements?

Answer:-

Let the company know you are more than simply interested in a fun job. Ask your potential employer what type of business he would like to develop in the future, and if the company has any current strategies or timelines for adding a new division or pursuing a new type of event. This will show the employer that you understand your job is to help the company make money, not just to run tournaments or plan birthday parties.

Question # 33

How do you measure the success of your event?

Answer:-

This is another question which helps to assess that your candidates are approaching event planning from a professional standpoint as, in many ways, an event is only as good as you can prove. Planning a 'legendary night' where everyone enjoys themselves sounds all well and good, but how do you then go on to prove to the client that it has enhanced their brand, increased staff motivation or coverage or brought them lots or prospective new leads. Keeping event-goers happy is not all that goes into a successful event, this is not club promoting, this is professional event planning so it is just as important that venue staff, suppliers and contractors are happy too. And the client of course.

Question # 40

What are some strategies you use for managing and prioritizing work for yourself when there is too much work and too few staff members to complete the tasks at hand?

Answer:-

Event deadlines and size play a huge factor in prioritizing events. For example, while planning a week long retreat that was happening in 8 months I also had to continue planning weekly meetings as well as small events. I broke the major event down into major tasks (one for each month) and broke that down to a "to do" list. Once that was broken down I scheduled my weekly to do lists on top of that. I was able to see efficiently each item I had to do daily to accomplish things in the near future as well as far.

Question # 47

What tools do you use to source and record venues?

Answer:-

'Perform a Google search' is the answer to so many 'how do you find' questions these days, but in this particular case you're looking for that little bit more. References to respected industry publications such as Event magazine's online directory and annual venue awards would show a willingness to keep up to date with venue developments, while they should be able to name other specific websites, directories and venue finders that they use.

An efficient event planner should also be keeping their own records of venues and their own professional experiences with them, including positives and negatives and any notes that may help inform their decisions for future events. Whether it's CRM software or their own personalised spreadsheet, the important thing is demonstrating an effective and efficient way of keeping track of their venues and showing an understanding of why this sort of record-keeping is important.

Tell us why you're the best candidate for this job?

Answer:-

This is perhaps the one question that defines your fit for the job in the interviewer's mind. Start by reviewing the job description thoroughly and look for areas that are a good match with your qualifications and experience. Find at least three great reasons that match with your experience and background that qualify you to be the right candidate for the job. Most employers will ask this question at some point in the interview, either directly or in an indirect way. On the rare chance that it doesn't come up in the interview, you can always use these talking points as your 'last thing to say' before the end of the interview.

Question # 53

How do you keep up-to-date with event industry changes?

Answer:-

Again, a question with no definitive right or wrong answer but one that gives the candidate the chance to show their personal interest and passion for the industry or to show that they have used their initiative when researching it as a career path. "I read Event, The Main Event and Stand Out magazines, have Google News alerts set up for 'event management' and 'event planning'" is the sort of answer that would suggest they are on the right track, while namedropping key industry bloggers, LinkedIn groups and relevant influential Tweeters will give you even more cause for encouragement. Naming industry events, conferences and meet-ups they have been to or regularly attend, annual reports they keep an eye out for or active online communities with which they engage will show an even more proactive approach to staying on top of the industry.

Question # 57

What are some of your favorite ways to enhance an event on a budget?

Answer:-

Of course, event planning isn't all team building with Google or staging multi-million pound festivals, there are times when you need to make something sparkle with limited resources. This is a great way to test your candidates' initiative, assess their creative thinking and see if they show flashes of originality and fresh thinking when it comes to planning stand-out events on a budget. Practical considerations such as providing a cloakroom or positioning plenty of water jugs around the venue demonstrate an understanding of things which will make delegates' lives easier without costing a fortune, while mentioning little details such as ensuring somebody is in place to greet arrivals or putting fresh flowers around the bar help to show that personal approach to event planning too.

Answer:-

Most employers are looking for people with a passion for the company and what they do. Knowing as much as you can about the company and the job is key to showing how passionate you are about the job opportunity. The best way to do this is to set aside three to four hours to learn as much as you can about the company you may eventually end up working for. Use resources such as their website, Facebook page, press releases, and the job description itself. Learn as much as you can about your prospective employer's products, services, customers and competition. This gives you an advantage when trying to answer many such related questions. Most importantly, the fact that you spent time researching the company, demonstrates your initiative and passion.

Question # 63

How would you prioritize an event?

Answer:-

Priorities usually depend on the event time and size. I usually find out what a client feels is the most important part of his event and I focus on that primarily.
